Sharing evidences to improve quality of care through publication has become extremely important in health care services with the primary aim of safe and best care. Health care professionals now require knowledge and skills more than ever before, to meet the challenges of changing disease patterns, demographics and patient requirements. Currently, as Inter Professional Practice is taking momentum to bring practitioners of health care together, to share their knowledge and skills in order to provide safe care for individuals under the services in the hospitals as well as public, it is imperative to publish information derived through systematic researches and experiences in managing especially rare cases. With this thought of patient as the core of health care industry and safe care as the core of health care services MCON Manipal of Manipal University has launched this biannual journal in January 2015.

This journal opens the platform for academicians and practitioners in all the health care professions to disseminate the evidences derived through research, observations and practice.

The editorial board and reviewers have taken immense effort to make sure that the articles of good quality get published. Having successfully brought out two issues, the journal is stepping into the timely publication of the third issue of the journal with articles from national and international researchers in the field of nursing, education, medicine and allied health disciplines.

I am glad that the previous two issues were well taken by the health care community.

Wish all the readers of the journal a VERY BRIGHT NEW YEAR 2016.
